PRO-BONO-PUBLICO.

When fainting with hunger, how pleasant to meet
With a friend who'll provide us with something to eat:
Refreshed, with new zeal we life's journey pursue,
As thousands attest who their meals take of—
True.

His place is so central, —and, then, his Saloon
Is stored with such viands,—night, morning, and noon,
— That our sensible men—and their "better-halves," too—
Take their BREAKFAST—and DINNER—and SUPPER, of—True.

(Besides, in another apartment you'll find
A Saloon well provided with food for the mind:
There Gleason most happy will be to serve you,
When the body you've fed at the tables of— True.

To all who wish well in these "hard times" to live,
One word of most friendly advice we will give:
While business is dull,—and you've dimes but a few,—
Buy your BREAKFAST—or DINNER—or SUPPER, of—True.

At the Montgomery House —upon Tremont Street, —
At the corner of Bromfield, —you'll find this retreat,— In the rear of F. Gleason's famed Publishing Hall, — Where True will be happy to wait on you all.

When once you this pleasant resort shall have tried,
(Where the wants of both body and mind are supplied,) We feel very sure this one thing you will do— Take your BREAKFAST—or DINNER—or SUPPER, of— True.

Now, Ladies and Gents, our brief ditty is done,—
The words we have spoken are "TRUE"—every one:
May this "word to the wise" prove sufficient for you, And incite you — WHEN HUNGRY — to patronize — True.
